

Dwelling

A dwelling is defined as a self-contained unit designed to accommodate a single household. This term encompasses various types of residential buildings, including houses, flats, and bungalows. In the context of UK building regulations, it is crucial to ensure that dwellings meet specific standards for safety, energy efficiency, and ventilation.

In the UK, a dwelling must provide essential living spaces such as bedrooms, a kitchen, and bathroom facilities. The design and construction of dwellings are governed by regulations that ensure they are safe, habitable, and energy-efficient.